Is It Nothing to You? BY CHARLES IDEN.

Is it nothing to you that the widows mourn In bitter tears as hunger walks beside, While a cruel war grinds on, and soldiers fall, Their courage adding to a crimson tide? Is it nothing to you that when nations clash

The ranks are filled from humble homes that give All of valor and strength that their firesides have, And orphaned ones must plead for chance to live! Is it nothing to you? Then, my fellow man,

Your heart is but an empty urn upturned. And the shifting sands have drained the love it held; Dead ashes lie where once compassion burned.

Is it nothing to you that when others fall Our people sit supinely by and wait, While the wily ones of Rome who enter here Are sent to sow new treachery and hate! They are sowing death, despair and utter woe For generations yet unborn to find; They are sowing strife along the traveled ways

And forging gyves the sons of men to bind. Is it nothing to you! Hear the hunger cry Of orphaned ones who cannot understand, And meet, forewarned, these alien ones who come To lead us captive in a captive land.
